Oklahoma Baptists Women's Retreat to encourage women to 'Be Joyful,' April 21-22

>> by Staff

DAVIS—"Be joyful in hope, patient in affliction, faithful in prayer" (Rom. 12:12).

This little verse packs some powerful instructions from the Apostle Paul, and the 2023 Oklahoma Baptists Women's Retreat will focus on each phrase during the event's three general sessions.

The Women's Retreat will be at Falls Creek Baptist Conference Center, April 21-22, and will offer another great opportunity for Oklahoma Baptist women to gather, fellowship and experience all this annual event offers.

"This weekend away at Falls Creek has become a staple calendar event for women across Oklahoma as they escape the demands of everyday life to focus on worshipping the Lord and connecting with one another," said Amy Cordova, Oklahoma Baptists missions and women's ministry partner and program director of the retreat.

Five speakers headline the event, including Jamy Fisher, wife of Todd Fisher, executive director-treasurer of Oklahoma Baptists. Fisher is active in writing and teaching Bible studies and serving in women's and college ministry.

Elizabeth Woodson is a Bible teacher and writer for Lifeway. She is a contributing author for "World on Fire" and the author of "Embrace Your Life: How to Find Joy When The Life You Have is Not The Life You Hoped For." Mary Wiley is another Lifeway author who wrote "Everyday Theology," an eight-week Bible study exploring essential doctrines and why they matter in everyday lives.

Sandy Wisdom-Martin serves as executive director-treasurer for national WMU in Birmingham, Ala. She has been involved in women's ministry for 26 years. Lauren Green McAfee works at the Hobby Lobby corporate office and is an author and founder of Stand for Life, which seeks to promote human dignity of life in the womb and women facing unplanned pregnancies.

Worship leaders through music for the Women's Retreat include Eden Trentham of Jenks, First and Minister James Willis and Nu Praze Choir from Oklahoma City, Prospect.

Falls Creek will have many of its regular features available for the retreat including the zipline, a 5K run, as well as the Centennial Prayer Garden and walk-up activities in the amphitheater.

"One of the greatest benefits of attending the Women's Retreat is developing a deeper relationship with other like-minded women who are pursuing Christ," Cordova said. "The time in the car, cabins and walking the grounds of Falls Creek is incredibly valuable as women engage in conversations that are encouraging one another to know and follow Christ."

The Women's Retreat will once again be a hybrid event, allowing churches to host gatherings across the state while also meeting at Falls Creek.

"I realize the great effort it takes to leave home for just one night during a busy spring schedule," Cordova said. "Rearranging the calendar and preparing to be away is a worthy effort to focus our minds on Christ. My prayer is women come back refreshed and inspired to live for Jesus in their homes, workplaces and communities."

An offering also will be taken at the Women's Retreat that will support the work of International Mission Board missionaries who are serving people of Ukraine and Russia.

Registration deadline is Saturday, April 1, to attend the Women's Retreat in person at Falls Creek. For more information on registration as well as schedule and other retreat features, visit oklahomabaptists.org/women/retreat.

It was an amazing sight. People waiting in line for hours. Strangers talking to strangers, sharing their stories. Everyone was waiting for one man.

They had set up a stage for this man, and groupies had packed in tightly, hoping they could touch him. As he walked out on the catwalk, a guitar slung around his neck, they stretched out their arms, desperately trying to touch him. Young, old, it made no difference. For the next three hours straight, he had everyone in the palm of his hands. They had all come to see one man: Bruce Springsteen.

One young lady caught my attention. She was the closest to the famous singer, fitting into the right angle where the catwalk and stage joined. She danced her heart out, singing every song and knowing the motions that went with them. (I never knew you had to make certain motions to certain songs at a Bruce Springsteen concert.)

For three hours, she contorted her body in every shape you could think of. This girl had more joints in her body than humanly possible. She didn't care what anyone thought, she was caught up into the moment and was one with the "Boss," which his die-hard followers call him. But she wasn't the only one with moves, you ought to see the elderly lady beside me.

In the end, everyone walked away talking about how Springsteen had blessed them. What I took away is the intensity these people manifested.

I can count on one hand the number of concerts I have attended. My first was the Mamas and the Papas in the '60s. The other night, 55 years later, I went to my third concert. Each one was filled with people who had intensity.

In Mark 5, we read the story of Jesus coming to the village of Magdala. A large crowd gathered to see what they could make of this man whom they had heard so much about. In the crowd that day was a woman who had been hemorrhaging for 12 years. She believed if she only could touch the hem of Jesus' garment, she would be healed.

I wonder what level of intensity she possessed to reach out to Jesus. One of my favorite pictures is painted on the wall of the Magdala Visitor's Center. It portrays the feet of a crowd, and near the ankles, a woman's hand is stretching out to touch the hem of Jesus' garment. She touched, and she was healed.

Have we lost that intensity, that desire to reach out to Jesus? Maybe that is what is wrong with our country. Those who hold the name of Jesus have lost their passion, their intensity to find Jesus in their daily lives. If we seek, He will heal.

"If my people, who are called by my name, will humble themselves and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven, and I will forgive their sin and will heal their land" (2 Chron. 7:14). m

"I'm just tired of suffering." These are the words of a person known as "Lois" in Canada who underwent gender reassignment surgery in 2009. The aftermath of the surgery has been nothing short of horrific for Lois who has had great difficulty in receiving medical care as a person who has "transitioned."

Not only has Lois faced physical turmoil, post-surgery, but mental distress has added great suffering. Lois is one of a growing community of those who were told gender reassignment surgery would solve problems, when in reality, it only created many more.

Sadly, the story gets worse. In Canada, those experiencing suffering, can apply for MAiD (Medical Assistance in Dying), what we call euthanasia. Officially, this is reserved for those with terminal diagnoses, but the government is willing to interview those who do not fit that criteria. Lois hopes to receive government authorization to take the death pill and end the years of pain.

Francis Schaeffer said, "The devil never gives us the luxury of fighting only on one front." The story of Lois highlights transgender issues, mental illness and euthanasia. Each of these issues are complicated and complex. They all relate back to the same Christian doctrine, the Imago Dei.

Every person is made in the Image of God. Everyone has inherent dignity that cannot be taken away. This is why Francis Schaeffer said there are no little people. No other creature is made in God's image. This doctrine is our basis for being a people who are pro-life. The baby in the womb deserves life because he or she is made in the image of God.

Our recognition of dignity does not end at birth. We are pro-life "from womb to tomb." That includes supporting adoption and foster care, so that once a baby is born, he or she can grow up in a family the way that God designed.

But it also includes that transgender person who realizes that transition was a mistake, like Laura Perry, whose story has been told in the Baptist Messenger of going from being "Transgender to Transformed." It includes that person who is contemplating euthanasia. It includes the person whose anxiety makes it hard to breathe at times. Being truly pro-life means recognizing the God-given dignity of every person, but it doesn't end there.

To anyone wanting to end suffering, the answer is not death. The answer is not surgery, and it is not government-sanctioned suicide. The answer is found in a God who came in flesh to save men and women out of their sin and suffering. The answer is, has always been, and will always be Jesus Christ.

He said, "Come to me, all who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" (Matt. 11:28). The suffering and tired need the rest that only Jesus can provide. But they also need the community that only a family, the church, can provide.

Our polarized society would lead us to see people as "other," worthy of passing by. Jesus calls us to step into the mess of hurt and pain and offer life, just as He did for us. m
